one has ever been injured by those trees. The installation of a sidewalk for the bike trail is hardly a good reason to remove the beautiful iconic trees.

But, like the way of the Falk Mansion for a Safeway building on the best piece of real estate in Arcata, this action is another perfect example of how restoration and maintenance are not considered a valuable expense. There are many other examples of iconic structures that have been lost to progress.

Yet we have lost more than the cost of maintaining the trees. Their grandeur cannot be replaced. Certainly, a sidewalk is no replacement for such majestic beauty as those trees were. It is just sad.

I pray the wood will be used for more than just firewood. The creation of some fantastic structure that the community could admire would be appropriate for the destruction of such a grove of trees.

If there are plans for such a structure, I would love to hear more about it and donate to it. Thank you to all other community members who feel the trees are a great loss. And who agree to mourn with

College of the Redwoods hit by enrollment scheme to steal financial aid

By Kimberly Wear

kim@northcoastjournal.com

College of the Redwoods is facing an enrollment problem — scammers who use bots to submit fake applications, taking advantage of the community college system's open-door policy in an attempt to sign up for classes and steal financial aid meant for students in need.

But it's not just about the money. These so-called "ghost students" are also clogging up classes, sometimes keeping real students from accessing courses they need, and forcing admission officials to dedicate an extraordinary amount of time to separate real applications from the spectral ones, which recently began appearing locally at an unprecedented rate.

"Last spring, we had a significant increase in fraudulent applications which culminated in the summer term with roughly 60 percent of our daily applications being deemed fraudulent," CR's Director of Admissions and Financial Aid Tiffany Schmitcke said in an email to the Journal. "We can't speak as to how many actual enrollments those equated to, however we did have a couple of summer classes where we were able to identify 30 percent of the students enrolled were fraudulent. Once we determined they were fraudulent, we dropped them from any classes and closed out the accounts."

CR political science professor Ryan Emenaker said he first noticed something was a bit off at the beginning of this school year.

While he teaches several classes that often fill up because they are general education requirements, one in particular, his more specialized online Political Controversy class, suddenly became very popular.

Overall, Emenaker said, the course tends to do OK enrollment wise. But this year it was filled to the cap of 30 students several weeks before the semester even started, with a waiting list of six, which gave him pause. Then things took a sudden turn.

After admissions and records had completed its weeding out process, he said the class went down to around 18 students when the first day of school rolled around.

"So more than half of the people who were supposedly enrolled were gone in just a couple of days and I've never seen anything like that," Emenaker said. "Normally, we get attrition of a couple of students ... but I've never seen a class that was maxed out like that and then it all of a sudden go away."

That, he said, leaves him wondering how many actual students were trying to sign up but couldn't, or faced similar barriers in other classes they needed due to the scammers. Conversely, the situation also leaves CR vulnerable to running too many sections with too few students, either by opening up additional sections only to find the need never existed or by not having the right information in time to cancel or combine online courses to better fit demand.

"At a certain point, if you don't have a critical mass of students, the class doesn't go as well," Emenaker said, explaining that some courses depend on robust student participation, whether in person or online discussion boards. "There's a certain point where there is too much attrition to make this function well."

While there's always a certain number of students who drop out of a class for any number of reasons, Emenaker said what he saw this semester was "staggering."

"I've never seen drops like this, so it feels like something has definitely changed," he said.

College of the Redwoods is not alone. For the last several years, "ghost students" have been haunting the California Community College system, which saw a significant uptick in fraudulent applications during the pandemic shift to online classes.

According to a recent report in the San Francisco Chronicle, an estimated 20 percent of enrollment attempts statewide since July of 2022 were believed to be scams — or more than 460,000 of the 2.3 million submissions made via the 116-campus system's online application process.

The problem is acute enough that the California Legislature allocated $100 million last year — $25 million in ongoing assistance and $75 million one-time funding — for cybersecurity staffing and system upgrades to combat enrollment scams and the hacking of information systems.

"We have layered security tools, which we are continually improving, that can detect fraudulent activity at the system-level, though we do not discuss specifics," CCC Chancellor Office spokesperson Melissa Villarin said in an email to the Journal. "Colleges also continue to monitor fraud locally, both on their digital platforms and in their classrooms to make sure the students are real. We have had substantial success at dramatically reducing fraudulent attempts to enroll in our system but continue to remain vigilant to these efforts. We remain engaged in ongoing maintenance and improvement of the information security of our application and the digital platforms throughout our system."

Those improvements have helped, she said, limiting the level of reimbursements that colleges had to make for fraudulently distributed financial aid to $2.5 million last year, which equates to less than one-10th of 1 percent of the $2.6 billion in federal and state aid distributed across the system.

"As an open access system of higher education, community colleges are more likely to be targeted than four-year institutions with eligibility thresholds that make them more difficult targets for bad actors," Villarin said. "This problem is not limited to California and as institutions harden their security profile, perpetrators typically seek out remaining soft targets elsewhere. In discussions with [U.S. Department of Education] Office of the Inspector General (OIG) investigators this year, the Chancellor's Office was informed that other similar fraudulent activity occurring around the nation and is a concern of other state entities."

She said the Chancellor's Office is not releasing detailed information because the scam remains under investigation. The Chronicle reported that the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Inspector General said it was conducting nearly 50 "active investigations" into fraud rings targeting colleges, including in California.

In addition to safeguards that have been "layered into the application process," known as CCCApply, Villarin said, "The Chancellor's Office in December will introduce a new identity verification tool that will significantly reduce the number of fraudulent applications that make it through the central portal, reducing false positives, thereby reducing workload for colleges and protecting students."

Back at CR, Schmitcke said the recent onslaught of fake applications the campus encountered was all-consuming.

"The impact on the admissions staff was significant; doubling the time it would normally take to process the daily applications and also causing them to be on high alert for anything that looked like a 'bot,'" she said, adding that they also ran 20 to 60 applications received each day though the CCCApply system, which "has a spam filter that catches a lot of these before they even get to CR and is constantly upgrading them to help prevent fraud.”

“We also implemented a variety of additional measures ourselves to try and minimize fraudulent applications getting through our system,” Schmitcke continued. “Thankfully, whatever recent update the CCC Tech Center did in August has vastly decreased the number of fraudulent applications we are currently receiving.”

Professors and instructors are also playing a role in helping to spot the fraudsters who make it into classes, trying to identify them early on, before they can get their hands on financial aid dollars.

That, Emenaker said, can be tricky and it's also a balancing act. This semester was particularly hard because wildfires in the region cut off electricity and internet access to areas of Del Norte County for an extended period of time, heightening concerns about the potential of dropping students who might not be checking in to class because they simply didn't have access, or they had evacuated.

It's an issue compounded by some students' use of AI programs to generate papers or other course assignments, Emenaker said, noting he has at least one student who he's not sure actually exists.

“The difficult thing for me is I have real students who are using AI to turn in work and then, apparently, I have fake students who are pretending to be real students and I can't tell the difference between a real person using AI and AI pretending to be a real person ... or it's hard to tell,” Emenaker said. “It's really difficult because you want to provide access and you want to assume good faith. ... I think that's part of the way the scam works, right? On some level to do a good job at teaching, you have to assume goodwill. You are trying to overcome barriers.”

Overall, Emenaker said he finds the idea of scammers targeting the state's community college system — with its very foundation built on opening doors to a higher education and training in an accessible way for the betterment of both students and society as a whole — “deflating.”

“We're the largest college system the world has ever seen,” he said. “This is the grand experiment in democratizing education and making higher education available to a broad swath of the public. It's an absolutely amazing thing we've done and then you have this. ... It feels like it's taking advantage of a very important and useful system and makes it harder for the people who need it to access it. ... It's a different level of violation when it feels like this.” ●

Lindsay Rimmer

Local tie-dye business

Did you know that many of the employees you see working at Murphy's Markets are also talented artists and craftspeople? Meet Lindsay Rimmer, supervisor of Murphy's Market in Glendale and founder of Big Dog Graphics, a local tie-dye business.

"I like this Murphy's location the best," says Lindsay. "Travis Jones hired me and created the most welcoming atmosphere ever. He really inspired me to appreciate this particular community and appreciate doing my job. He was a great mentor, as is Brett Hogan."

"I've had a few different cashier jobs, and the difference in customers elsewhere and at Murphy's is like night and day," continues Lindsay. "They are so kind and community driven. It's comforting to have people that you know come in all the time."

Working at Murphy's helped her expand her tie-dye business, Big Dog Graphics, where she makes custom-designed sweatshirts, sweatpants, beanies, bags, T-shirts and more. "My employees and coworkers have been super supportive and even own my hoodies. Some customers, too!"

Lindsay says what inspires her most is doing her own designs: "My customers give me an idea of what they want and then give me artistic liberty around that." Her classic base design is a dark-colored hoodie that she bleaches with semi-anatomically correct skeletons. Now that she's including sweatpants, you can own a full skeletal outfit.

Lindsay and her partner, Brent Gallagher, met while working at Murphy's and Lindsay says he's been her biggest supporter, encouraging her to get new ideas, upcycle old pieces, and sell her creations. So many orders have started rolling in that she recently hired her best friend to help with social media and sales.

"My roommate and I started at Murphy's together," she says. "I also met my partner and really close friends here. I live with these people now or see them everyday, and I feel like that really says a lot about the people that we hire."

If you're interested in learning more about Lindsay's business, follow her on Instagram @bigdog_graphics, or email them at bigdoggraphics2022@gmail.com. There is also a WhatsApp Business number available if you are intrigued.

Huffman Asks FEMA for More 'Flexible, Equitable' Disaster Aid Formula, Citing Rio Dell Earthquake

North Coast Congressman Jared Huffman questioned the head of the Federal Emergency Management Agency about inadequacies built into the disaster relief program Sept. 19, specifically citing the recovery struggles in Rio Dell as an example of how the system is failing smaller, rural communities in the wake of natural disasters.

While thanking FEMA Administrator Deanne Criswell for the important work the agency does across the nation as she testified before the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, Huffman asked for the agency "to provide more flexible, equitable ways for devastated communities to qualify for federal disaster relief from FEMA."

Huffman emphasized that residents in less affluent communities are often left to fend for themselves, unable to meet the damage thresholds that trigger federal aid, while more urban, wealthy areas are able to meet the total required with just a fraction of the damage and far less impact.

"We leave a lot of rural, less affluent communities behind. And with the climate crisis bringing us more and bigger disasters, we really need to tackle this equity problem now to get ahead of it," he said. "So, I told you a little about my district. We've got earthquakes, we've got tsunamis, we've got wildfires. It is sort of the poster child for this problem because FEMA's arbitrary and inflexible financial damage threshold can leave devastated communities behind."

He pointed to the magnitude 6.4 earthquake that hit Rio Dell particularly hard on Dec. 22, damaging 25 percent of the small city's housing stock and causing nearly $26 million in damage to the city's vital infrastructure, but still fell far short of meeting FEMA's $65 million threshold for releasing aid.

Huffman also noted the 2017 Helena Fire in Trinity County, which took out 15 percent of the county's housing but still didn't qualify because the property values were not high enough.

"You know, if you ... took the same disaster and it happened in an affluent place, Pebble Beach, any number of other places maybe took out a small fraction of the homes, you'd have no problem triggering federal disaster relief," he said. "But these communities were left without that support."

Conversely, Huffman noted Crescent

City was only able to qualify for FEMA aid in 2011 after the massive Tōhoku earthquake in Japan triggered a tsunami that destroyed the harbor there because of damage also caused at a harbor in Santa Cruz with "fancy yachts" that pushed the damage totals over the threshold.

"So, Administrator Criswell, it seems to me that this is fundamentally unfair and again, with more disasters coming, we really need to provide more flexible, equitable ways for devastated communities to qualify for federal disaster relief from FEMA," Huffman said, noting his staff would also be presenting her with a formal letter on the matter.

"I believe you have existing authority that would let you do a rulemaking to provide that flexibility and equity. But if you need new authority, additional authority," he said, "I hope you will please let us know and we will get to work to make it happen."

Criswell responded that Huffman made several good points and that one of her priorities at FEMA has been "equitably delivering our programs," adding that the agency looks at a "number of factors," including the state and local government's ability to provide support as well as "the amount of insurance and the amount of damage."

"I mean, it can be very complex and that is why we are continuing to work on ways that we can improve the way we're delivering our programs, but also better understand the barriers that communities, just as you mentioned, are experiencing to being able to get the assistance that they need in order to properly recover from these disasters," she said. "And so, you have my commitment to continue to find ways that we can improve the way we're delivering our programs and ensuring that everybody who is eligible for our programs has access to that assistance."

Huffman also sent a formal letter to FEMA requesting the agency work with legislators "on developing and updating criteria to allow disaster assistance to be applied more equitably and with sufficient flexibility so that less affluent and rural communities can access the relief and support they need and deserve."

"I look forward to working with you on this important issue," he wrote.

EPD Describes Fatal Stabbing Suspect as 'Armed and Dangerous'

The Eureka Police Department has named a suspect in a fatal Aug. 2 stabbing at a residence on the 100 block of W. Sonoma Street.

According to a news release, EPD has secured an arrest warrant for Eureka resident Destinee Grace Rhamy, 20, in connection with the death of 27-year old Holland Elbik.

Rhamy is described as a white female, who is about 5 feet 6 inches tall with a medium build, dark hair and blue eyes. She is considered to be armed and dangerous, according to the release, and EPD asks that anyone who sees her or knows where she might be immediately call the department at (707) 441-4044 or 911 and not attempt to contact her.

According to EPD, officers responded to the W. Sonoma Street residence after receiving a 911 call reporting a physical fight at that location and found Elbik inside suffering from "medical distress."

"Officers and medical personnel from Humboldt Bay Fire and City Ambulance attempted lifesaving measures, unfortunately, Elbik died at the hospital," the release states. "Officers determined she had sustained multiple injuries as a result of a physical altercation between Elbik, a roommate, Destinee Rhamy, and a male friend of Rhamy. The EPD has conducted an in-depth investigation of the incident and has determined Holland Elbik was stabbed to death during the altercation."

EPD asks anyone with information about the case to contact detective Ray Nunez at (707) 441-4109.

Arrest Made After Fatal Hit and Run at Richardson Grove

A 57-year-old Carmichael man was killed, and a Leggett man arrested after a hit-and-run crash on U.S. Highway 101 near Richardson Grove State Park on Sept. 20.

According to a California Highway Patrol press release, the 67-year-old Carmichael man was walking from a trail on the west edge of the roadway south of the park entrance when he stopped to wait for a family member. At that moment, a black Toyota Tundra heading south allegedly driven by Earl Castillo, 53, drifted off the roadway and onto the dirt shoulder, hitting the man. The truck then fled the scene.

Based on evidence found at the crash site and witness statements, police put out a be-on-the-lookout advisory for the pickup truck, which was spotted by some Caltrans workers, who called police. Two CHP officers then attempted to pull over the vehicle, which again fled at a high rate of speed, eventually turning up a private driveway only to be blocked by a locked gate, according to the release.

Police were then able to detain Castillo, who was later determined to be impaired, according to the release, and booked into jail on suspicion of driving under the influence causing grave injury, as well as other charges.

The identity of the man killed in the crash is being withheld at this time, pending notification of his family.

Tri-County Independent Living, residents raise alarm over pedestrian safety on Eureka's Fourth, Fifth streets

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

Sitting in the rec room of the Bayview Heights apartment complex on Eureka's Fourth Street earlier this month, Robert Lane says he feels like he's become a prisoner in his own home. Every time he goes out — whether to walk his beloved 13-year-old boxer mix Sadie, or to visit friends — it's the same story. On the good days, it's just the frustration of sitting in his motorized wheelchair at the corner of C and Fourth streets, watching the traffic zip past as no one pulls to a stop at the crosswalk and the minutes tick past. On the bad days, there are the near misses, like the one recently in which cars in the nearest two lanes of the three-lane road stopped at the intersection, prompting him to roll two-thirds of the way across only to have an impatient driver zip out of the middle lane into the far lane and speed through just inches from where he sat.

"It's to the point I don't even want to leave my house anymore," Lane said, his chair pulled close to the conference table. "It's just got so overwhelming. It's every single time I go out."

Over on Fourth Street, Mari Dorenstreich, an independent living specialist and program coordinator at Tri-County Independent Living, tells a similar story. Slight in stature, Dorenstreich uses crutches to get around and takes the bus to work, which requires her to cross Fifth Street to get into the office. The traffic, she says, almost never stops, adding that she's had several close calls like Lane's, with cars speeding by mere inches from her, so close she can feel a whoosh of air on her face.

"Twice, I feel the air pass by and I'm thinking, 'Do I have my will together?'" she quips, sitting in her office at Tri-County.

Dawn Albrecht, Tri-County's emergency preparedness coordinator, sitting to Dorenstreich's left, says these aren't isolated stories but daily occurrences. She says she constantly worries about Tri-County's clients, many of whom have mobility or sensory challenges, crossing the busy thoroughfares to access services, not just at Tri-County's offices but the other providers nearby.

"I cannot believe someone has not been struck and killed yet," she says, adding that she keeps a hand-held stop sign next to the office door and often interrupts her mornings to run out and help people — clients or otherwise — cross safely.

Albrecht recently penned a letter to Caltrans officials and the city of Eureka and the office of traffic safety pleading with them to implement traffic calming measures to increase pedestrian safety. Lane, meanwhile, started circulating a petition calling on the agencies to put a traffic light at the intersections of B Street and Fourth and Fifth streets. Within four days, he'd gathered nearly 150 signatures, mostly by rolling up and down Fourth and Fifth streets and asking passersby to sign.

The problem, as Lane, Albrecht and others explain it, is multi-fold. First off, the three-line roads running through an urban center are inherently unsafe, giving drivers a "freeway" feel and leaving pedestrians a lot of ground to cover to get safely from one curb to the other. Then, they say, the fact that there isn't a stop light on either thoroughfare from E Street down to Broadway gives drivers a lot of time to gain speed.

"This whole stretch is just, accelerate, accelerate, accelerate until they get to the light," says Roy Gomez, standing in front of his cannabis dispensary at Fifth and B streets, adding that he's seen a handful of accidents — one involving his son — and too many near misses to count at the intersection.

Adding to those issues, Gomez and others say, is that parked cars often line the streets abutting the intersection, creating visibility issues for crossing traffic and pedestrians. And bus stops — on Fourth between A and B streets and on Fifth Street between C and D streets — ensure a constant stream of people looking to cross.

But what really keeps Albrecht up at night are those Tri-County clients with mobility issues, as well as Lane and the nine or so other folks, most of them veterans, relying on wheelchairs who live at Bayview Heights and have to navigate these crossings daily.

"There are going to be people crossing who don't have the ability to jump out of the way," she says.

About an hour earlier and over on Fourth Street, Lane taps his chair: "This thing goes 4 miles per hour and it takes a bit to get up to 4 miles per hour.”

By the numbers, these aren’t Eureka’s most dangerous intersections, says Colin Fiske, the executive director of the Coalition for Responsible Transportation Priorities (CRTP).

“CRTP has been focused for a while on Broadway for bike and pedestrian safety improvements because that has historically been the epicenter of the safety crisis in our region,” Fiske writes in an email to the Journal. “But Fourth and Fifth Streets are not far behind. And actually, if you look at a heat map of fatal and severe bike and pedestrian injuries over the last decade (2012 to 2022), they are most concentrated on the east side of Fourth and Fifth near Myrtle Avenue/State Route 255.”

That said, Fiske adds that the stretch of Fourth and Fifth that is the focus of concern for Albrecht and Lane is far from safe.

Eureka Police spokesperson Brittany Powell crunched some numbers at the Journal’s request and reports that since 2020, eight vehicle-versus-pedestrian collisions have been reported on Fourth and Fifth streets between E Street and Broadway — about 8 percent of the city’s total. Five of the eight, she adds via email, were hit and runs, and another was fatal.

Over the same time period, according to data provided by Powell, about 15 percent of the department’s traffic stops occurred on the entirety of Fourth and Fifth streets. (She wasn’t able to limit the data to the stretch from E Street down to Broadway.) But the total number of traffic stops citywide fell from 5,133 in 2020 to 1,717 last year, which Powell attributed to staffing levels and “EPD not being able to staff a traffic unit.” As such, she says no targeted enforcement is planned in the area.

Eureka Public Works Director Brian Gerving says most potential changes to the configuration of Fourth and Fifth streets would fall “firmly under the control of Caltrans,” leaving the city little flexibility to implement pedestrian safety measures on the thoroughfares. But Gerving says the city can impose parking restrictions on Fourth and Fifth streets, already regularly evaluates requests from the public to alter curb markings and would welcome input from Tri-County.

The one larger exception, Gerving says, is the “C Street Bike Boulevard” project which will be implemented next year with an Active Transportation Program grant the city received. The boulevard will run from Waterfront Drive to Harris Street, and will see “rectangular rapid flashing beacons” — which flash yellow to alert traffic that a pedestrian is looking to cross — installed at C, Fourth and Fifth streets.

Caltrans District One spokesperson Myles Cochrane says “nonmotorized safety along U.S. 101 in Eureka has remained a continued priority” for the agency. Much of the agency’s focus, Cochrane says, has been on the Broadway corridor that Fiske dubbed the “epicenter of the safety crisis” in the area. Cochrane listed a number of projects in the works there. Cochrane says Caltrans also recently installed a new signal at Fourth and L streets, and added bulb-outs — curb extensions that shorten pedestrian crossing distances — as well as ADA curb ramps.

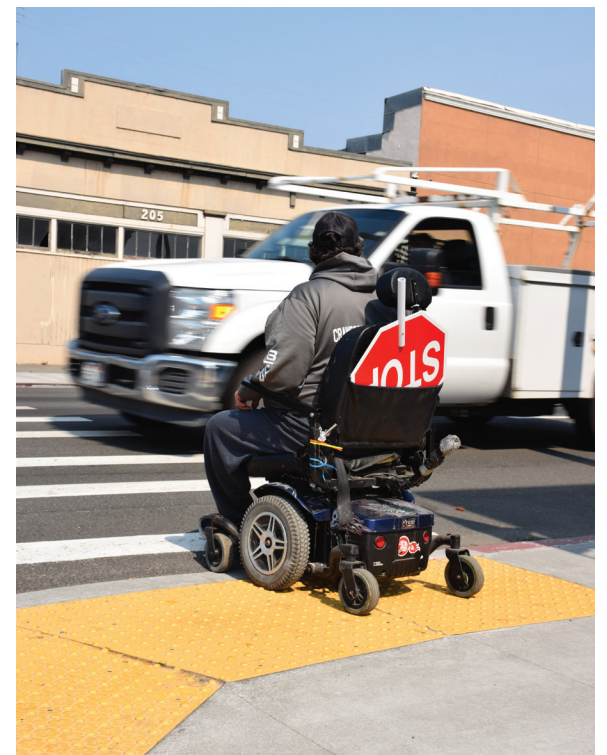

Cochrane points out that over the past five years, nearly all the intersections north of Broadway along Fourth and Fifth streets “have met or stayed below the state’s average for collisions in comparison to similar locations.”

“It’s worth noting that historically, safety projects have typically been initiated at much higher collision rates than what we’re seeing in these areas,” he says, adding that Caltrans’ safety team is planning a “thorough investigation” of the area, which may lead to additional safety measures.

Fiske, for his part, says mitigation measures can help. For example, he says “daylighting crosswalks — or prohibiting parking near them to improve visibility — is a “proven strategy.” Installing the flashing beacons like are planned for the C Street intersections will “probably help a little,” he says, though he’d much rather see crossing signals installed that provide actual red lights to stop motorists completely, like the one installed near Broadway Cinema. But the real problem, he says, is structural and beyond easy fixes.

“We know from decades of research that (similar to Broadway) the design of Fourth and Fifth Streets — wide, three-lane, one-way streets with a relatively high design speed in a busy urban setting — virtually guarantees a high level of injuries and deaths for people walking, biking and rolling,” he says. “Making Fourth and Fifth Streets truly safe for everybody will require major redesign. It will likely require a reduction in the number of lanes along with other traffic calming measures, as well as protected bike facilities and redesigned intersections to prioritize safe crossings for people walking, biking and rolling.”

Aaron and Crystal Woodbury Haynes are relatively new to the neighborhood, having recently moved up from Petaluma to take over the former Eureka Reporter building at Fourth and C streets, which they are transforming into 4th Street Mercantile, slated to open next month.

The pedestrian safety issues became immediately apparent, Aaron Woodbury Haynes says, noting he recently saw a parent with a stroller sprint across the street. "It broke my heart," he says.

"If you're in here, you hear screeching brakes all day," Crystal Woodbury Haynes says, adding that every time it causes her heart to jump into her throat. "People need to stop calling them Fourth and Fifth streets. It's a highway."

Tired of hearing and seeing close calls, the couple has decided to take matters into their own hands and implement a small mitigation measure they saw in Petaluma at intersections near schools that didn't have crossing guards. They say they are buying two plastic baskets, with plans to affix one to each of the light polls on the north side of the intersection of Fourth and C Streets. Then they'll put orange caution flags in each, the idea being that pedestrians can pull a flag, use it to capture drivers' attention and slow traffic and then leave it in the basket on the other side when done.

"We're just going to pay for it and put it up," Crystal Woodbury Haynes says.

Lane, too, has taken matters into his own hands. Armed with a hand-held stop sign given to him by Albrecht, he says he's been able to bring traffic to a stop and cross safely in recent days.

"Oh man, they stop instantly," he says, a big smile stretching across his face. "I stick it out there and they put them skids on. It at least makes me feel a bit safe."

But the safety has come at a cost, as he doesn't feel comfortable walking Sadie, the boxer mix, while navigating the sign.

"I not only have to watch out for myself but I have to look out for her, too," he says, noting he doesn't take her out much anymore.

Albrecht, for her part, says she's glad the stop sign is providing Lane some relief but notes, "You shouldn't have to carry around a stop sign with you in your wheelchair just to cross the road." She says she remains hopeful the city and Caltrans will do whatever they can to add "just any additional safety features."

And she wants motorists to keep in mind that there are a lot of people looking to cross these stretches of road, and they need to drive accordingly. If they notice a car in an adjacent lane slowing to a stop, she says that's probably because a pedestrian is in the crosswalk and they should slow to a stop, too. Mostly, she says, people just need to slow down.

"I just want to give a nice, friendly reminder to all of the people out there in Humboldt: Please slow down on Fourth and Fifth streets," she says. "I would feel so awful if I accidentally hit someone and I don't think I'd ever get over that. I would never want to be that driver and I don't think anyone wants to have that happen in their lives. So just a reminder: 'Hey guys, there are a lot of people who cannot move faster. They don't have a choice. So, slow down.'" ●

Carriage House readies to open

Over the phone, chef Rochelle Burgess says she wasn't looking for a restaurant gig after the abrupt closure of her former post, the Angelina Inn, in Fernbridge. Her work as a personal chef was going well enough and she wasn't eager to work for someone else again. But after a friend tipped her off to a Craigslist post that sounded right up her alley, she got curious. A meeting with Carriage House owner Shannon Yodowitz and a cooking test later, and Burgess says, laughing, "It's just been both feet and arms in." The restaurant at 937 10th St. in Arcata (formerly The Griffin), is set for a soft opening Sept. 30, followed by a few days closed to fine tune the menu using diner feedback before opening for good.

That cooking test, held in Yodowitz's home kitchen, was indicative of the Carriage House menu and Burgess' style: udon with preserved lemon butter and shaved fennel, and, per Yodowitz's request, a BLT. The former served as an example of Burgess' interest in international influences and local ingredients, as well as her love of a thick noodle. (She is an unreserved fan, she says, of the underappreciated bucattini.) The latter was to see if she could perfect something simple and classic.

The menu taped to the still dark windows on 10th Street includes an udon dish, here with nduja, a soft and spicy Calabrian pork sausage, fennel and mint. A press release also describes a chocolate crèmeux "complemented by the aromatic rosemary whipped cream and the burst of sweetness from the grape gelée." Burgess says she's "trying to be as sustainable and low waste as possible," so when she was putting together a juniper dressing for the Dirty Martini Shrimp, she asked the folks at Jewell Distillery, whose spirits Carriage House will feature, for the cast-off botanicals from the gin mash. She dehydrates the un-distilled mash to create a gin-fragranced spice to the zero-proof dish, one of 14 "small but substantial plates," as she describes them, all "produce forward."

The menu has to work around some limitations, including the lack of a stove hood in the newly built, 100-square-foot kitchen. Burgess says the oven is "state of the art," with its own built-in hood system, but she had to come up with dishes that don't create grease vapors. "It's a challenge," she says. "If I'm not challenged, I don't want to do it because it's boring." All the menu items have to take the space and equipment into account, as well as the necessarily small kitchen staff, which will just be Burgess and a staff member. "You just go in there with one other person and bang it out."

Pale Moon rises

After a decade working in other people's breweries — two years at Eel River Brewing Co. and another eight at Lost Coast Brewery, working his way from bottling line mechanic to brewer — Jeff Finn has opened his own brewery. On Friday, Sept. 22, Pale Moon Brewing Co. held a soft opening at its 600 F St. location in Arcata's Uniontown Shopping Center.

Before getting into the business, Finn says, "I was a home brewer and I was really interested in beer, and I was working as a mechanic at the Arcata pool." A friend tipped him off to a brewery job in Fortuna and he dove into the industry. "Just kinda taught myself the basics and learned from all those smart people at the breweries," he says.

Pale Moon has been in the works for the last two years and Finn is starting small with a nanobrewery operation, a size smaller than a microbrewery and typically producing only a few thousand barrels of beer a year. He plans to have five beers on tap, rotating two — "a malty one and a hoppy one" — every month or so. There'll always be a lager, too. "I'm really trying to make things true to style," he says, noting Pale Moon's German pilsner uses German ingredients and the Scotch ale is all English.

Finn says Friday night was "a packed house" with friends and new faces, even a shared drinking song from an enthusiastic patron. But he was most happily surprised by the turnout and support from other local breweries. "Six Rivers [Brewery] brought their whole crew down," he says, and folks from Humboldt Brews were on hand, as well.

The camaraderie was a happy surprise. "The people who are technically my competition," he says.

Starting out, Finn plans for Pale Moon to be open 2 to 9 p.m. Fridays, noon to 9 p.m. Saturdays and noon to 8 p.m. Sundays. He hopes to open Thursdays and eventually Wednesdays, but he wants to be sure there's enough on hand for patrons. "The last thing I wanna do," he says, "is sell out."

Nanobrewery Pale Moon Brewing Co. opens in the Uniontown Shopping Center. Submitted

Sea of Possibilities

Emily Jung Miller's Ghost Net Landscape at the Reese Bullen Gallery

By L.L. Kessner

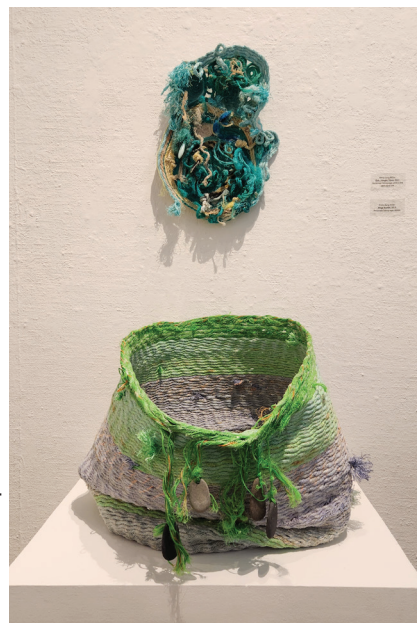

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

“I think I've always looked for the forgotten places,” says Oregon-based artist Emily Jung Miller. “I feel an honesty and also a mystery in the silent stories told by things left behind,” she explains. “Over time, nature transforms our human creations into something new and collaborative.”

Ghost Net Landscape, Miller's current exhibition at Cal Poly Humboldt's Reese Bullen Gallery, transforms marine debris into art that evolves over time with the participation of its viewers. Ghost Net Landscape showcases Miller's sculptural constructions, mostly handmade baskets and a few hanging pieces, which are built from the raw material of discarded fishing nets and rope and other industrial artifacts retrieved from the ocean. The show is also a continually evolving installation. Visitors to the gallery are invited to contribute to the artwork by making their own objects out of the same reclaimed material. Miller says that, in its new context, the raw material, which is detrimental to marine life and to the ecosystem when left in the sea, feels like treasure rather than trash. “The richness of its history gives it life.”

There is a table of tools and gloves and wire for community use just inside the doors of the gallery. Amid the arrangement of Miller's baskets on pedestals, there is a central platform with tubs of heavy, brightly colored netting and rope, all dragged from the ocean. Attendants offer advice on the proper use of the tools, and visitors — if they choose — can go to work with the materials, constructing new objects to display on the walls and in the back of the gallery. Like any landscape, it evolves and reemerges each day as a new formulation of itself, based on the actions of its inhabitants.

CPH student Skyler Friedland visited the show and was impressed with the “inclusive” aspect that allows viewers to make work in the show. Fellow student

Sam Poplewko reflected on the act of making art out of materials from our own coast and noted that Ghost Net Landscape can open students' minds about art and the environment. Charlie Burrowes commented that the exhibition's “repurposing [of] harmful waste that really has nowhere else to go was just incredible.”

What makes Miller's work unique among contemporary work that utilizes discarded objects as material to process our collective environmental anxiety, is its solution-focused positivity and its focus on community participation. Miller states, “Ghost Net Landscape is about transformation. The project's mission is to create space where positive transformation is a natural and joyful response.”

Miller's hands-on engagements with the debris turns it into surprising, vibrant visual forms. Describing her process, she says, “Sometimes I have an idea in advance, but mostly I just choose a few colors I want to see together and see where the material takes me. ... What happens if I turn the piece inside out, halfway through?” she asks. “How can I include knotted pieces and thicker pieces that really show that material history?”

Miller describes herself as a mixed-race Chinese American who relocated from Kauai to Oregon in 2014. She currently lives near the forested foothills of the Coast Range west of Portland Oregon, where she has maintained a full-time studio practice since 2016. She says that her art has its roots in “love of the sea.”

Of the ocean, Miller states, “There is no speaking, no doing, nothing required. When I need to center myself, I imagine swimming out from shore until I can only see the waves around me. It sounds kind of scary when I describe it but it feels so restful.”

That sense of rest and security in the infinite is something I try to include in my work, although I'm not sure how clearly it comes through."

Connecting with the ocean through its pollution, Ghost Net Landscape presents solutions and hope beyond the familiar problematization. It gives the community something to do, not with the totality of the world's pollution problems, but with our own experience of anxiety. It presents an opportunity to transform one part, a tangible prototype of transmutation.

Miller describes the exhibit's presentation of massed raw materials as speaking "to the global magnitude and complexity of this issue." She writes, "Ghost Net Landscape is a sanctuary and a prayer, not located outside the issue as a place to escape, but rather completely created from it." The exhibition "uses the materials themselves to ask what each of us will create, how each of us will transform and grow in a shared and joyful collaboration towards a more sustainable and equitable future."

Because It's There

By Collin Yeo
music@northcoastjournal.com

I'm packing up and heading out of town this week with the promise that I'll return with tales of adventure and conquest. For me, that boils down to the possibility of going far enough north up the Pacific Coast to see a puffin in its native home. While I concede a floating puffin is a pretty boring white whale, it is mine, and I've never asked much from the world in the way of exciting journeys. I'll leave that to other people, who see tall waves, mountains, rock formations and remote trails across treacherous landscapes and plan their travels accordingly. Perhaps the words of the late George Mallory, entombed (for now) on the frozen slopes of his obsession Mt. Everest, echo in all our heads, whether we are climbing the death zone of a mountain or simply looking for a puffin while birdwatching. When asked why he was driven to climb the mountain that claimed his body, he is supposed to have said, "Because it's there."

Seems like a good motto for hitting up the week for some fun, too.

Thursday

I'm going to suggest a nix on the big venue shows for tonight and instead juice the Adult Skate Night at the Blue Lake Roller Rink. I don't have a dog in this hunt myself — I'll be out of town celebrating my partner's birthday in the wilds of the Great Northwest — but I know with DJ Goldylocks at the helm, everything's gonna be groovier than a stack of vinyl at 7 p.m. ($15).

Friday

Unless you acted far in advance and managed to snag some tickets, the sold-out Thundercat show at the Van Duzer is not in your cards tonight, friend. Don't sweat it though; the Miniplex is putting on a banger at 9 p.m. San Francisco's warm, electro-tinged chamber pop act Healing Potpourri is in the house and the group is out flogging a new LP called Paradise, which was produced by Stereolab-collab-

Darrell Scott plays the Old Steeple on Saturday, Sept. 30, at 7:30 p.m.

Submitted

orator Sean O'Hagan. All signs point to this gig being a hidden gem, and for $12 at the door and $8 online advance, that's a hot deal. Locals Los Perdid and Mister Moonbeam also bring the noise.

Saturday

The world of music runs not on the headliner alone but on their secret weapon. You can call them the hired gun, the sideman, the multi-instrumentalist, but the job really all shakes out to be the same thing: they can play almost anything, on almost any instrument and make it sound good. The late David Lindley was one such player, Nils Lofgren and Ry Cooder, as well. A strong argument would put tonight's performer at the Old Steeple in that category. Darrell Scott has been in that role for ages, most recently with Robert Plant and the Zac Brown Band. He knows what he's doing, folks, and he writes his own tunes as well. I suggest giving him a listen tonight at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $40 at the door, $35 in advance.

If you aren't feeling the trip to Ferndale, you can enjoy a free gig at the Siren's Song Tavern at the same hour, featuring another local sideman and musician in general Robert Tripp, known for his work with CV, the Freeks, Datura Blues and many more. He's rolling out his new creation Shiny Eyes and will be joined by other master vibe-makers and musical gadabouts in the form of Elegant Humanoid, Idyl and DJ Dental Floss. This will be a good show, I guarantee it.

Sunday

Minneapolis rapper Prof is rolling through town again, once more appearing at the Arcata Theatre Lounge with an ensemble package of talent in tow, this tour's been given the moniker "The High Priced Shoes." Whatever that means is up for you to decipher; I'm here to share the details. Doors are at 7 p.m., you can get in for $25, and the other folks on the bill are Cashinova, J. Plaza, C Dot Castro and Willie Wonka, who I believe was onboard for the last run through town.

Monday

Yet another Monday packed with metal over at Savage Henry Comedy Club at 7 p.m. This week's offering is heavy in favor of the power violence genre, with touring Tijuana act Hong Kong Fuck You joining forces with local acts Grug!, T.I.C.K., and The Groomers. As always, this all-ages show is $10, and you need to bring an I.D. if you are of drinking age and wish to partake in fermented liquids.

Tuesday

The Siren's Song Tavern is hosting an interesting gig tonight at 7 p.m. The Secret Emchy Society is an Oakland-based, queer roots and country act that dabbles in the darker side of honky tonkin', murder balladry. I don't have a lock on the door price, but I'd suggest you give these folks a try regardless, because from what I have heard, this will be a real good time, and it's an off night, anyway.

Wednesday

It's midweek in the beginning of the spooky month, so why not go and catch a big screen presentation of a slightly macabre and murderous musical? I am talking about the 1986 Frank Oz-directed iteration of The Little Shop of Horrors, starring Rick Moranis as the nebbish florist Seymour, who finds himself in thrall with a man-eating flower whose hunger drives the silly plot to a romantic end. If nothing else, you can appreciate Steve Martin's scene-stealing role as a viciously cruel dentist and enjoy a moment of culture shock from seeing a time in history when Americans had enough access to dentistry that they could universally joke about the more sadistic aspects of the trade rather than bemoan the lack of care my generation enjoys. My last dental experience was nearly 20 years ago, when I paid someone at a dental college $200 to split and yank out an impacted wisdom tooth sans anesthesia. Thankfully, there was a liquor store in the same parking lot. Showtime is 7:30 p.m., it's $5 to get in and $9 to leave with a poster. Viva.

Collin Yeo (he/him) has heard that it's not the destination, but the journey that counts, but he still wants to see a fucking puffin. He lives in Arcata, a land rich with much, excluding puffins.

We are on the cusp of spooky season with October imminent and many favorite classic and soon-to-be classic horror and Halloween films set to dominate TV networks and streaming services. But how wicked would it be to watch them on the big screen with a group of like-minded fans? We're in luck. Ferndale Repertory Theatre is transforming its live theater space to a movie house for the Spooky Movie Series getting underway this Saturday, Sept. 30, with The Invisible Man* (1933), starring Claude Rains, showing at 7 p.m. ($10, $5 students/seniors). Concessions are available and other movies in the series are Bram Stoker's Dracula, Frankenstein, Ghostbusters and Friday the 13th. P.S.: The ATL is killing it in October with its movie lineup, too — we'll get to that next week.

Vocal cords need a break from all the seasonal screaming? October also means it's time to laugh yourself silly at the annual Savage Henry Comedy Festival happening Oct. 5-7 at multiple locations in Humboldt (individual shows start at $5, all-event passes start at $80). Headliners at this year's fest (the 12th) include Kyle Kinane, Emma Arnold, Monica Nevi, Ben Kronberg, Dave Waite, Cornell Reid, Nick Turner and more, plus lots of your favorite local yokels. Get the full schedule, lineup and tickets at savagehenrycomedy.com.

Enjoy the best of local craft brews at Humboldt Hoptoberfest, a fundraiser for the Blue Lake Education Foundation, happening Saturday, Sept. 30, from 12:30 to 5 p.m. at Perigot Park ($40, $35 advance). This all-ages event (21 and over get a commemorative glass for unlimited tastes) has something for everyone. Lagers, stouts, IPAs and more for the adults, and bounce houses, face painting and fields of green grass for the kids. Live music and food for everyone! Bands include Jacki & the Jollies, Bow-legged Buzzards and Mule Ranch. Food by the Doghouse, Blue Lake Pizza Co. and Alma's Mexican.

It Lives Inside

It Lives Inside's Desi Demons

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill
jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

IT LIVES INSIDE. As deeply as the tropes of teen horror movies are carved in the genre, a shift in perspective, in setting, in character can turn them on their head. Focused on an Indian American teenager, writer and director Bishal Dutta's It Lives Inside opens up new avenues to explore isolation, shame and family conflict. Desi experience and Indian lore are as much at the core of the movie as teen girlhood and navigating friendships and shifting identities. While it may not go as far into those explorations as it could, It Lives Inside speaks to an overlooked kind of American coming of age and it's a fun scare.

Samidha (Megan Suri), who goes by Sam, is blending in as best she can as a dark-skinned daughter of Indian American immigrants in a majority white suburban high school. To her mother Poorna's (Neeru Bajwa) chagrin, she's also pushing away from her family and culture, more interested in hanging out with a classmate than helping cook for an Indian celebration. Sam sniffs her clothes for Indian food smells upon leaving the house and endures cringy moments where she says nothing as white classmates stereotype her. But nothing is as mortifying to her as the appearance of her childhood bestie Tamira (Mohana Krishnan). A social outcast, Tamira's not fitting in, maybe because she's far less assimilated, maybe because her hair is a nest of tangles and she clearly hasn't slept in days, or maybe because she also clutches a jar of dirt in her trembling hands wherever she goes. When she reaches out to Sam and tells her she can no longer keep a demon trapped in that jar, Sam lashes out and smashes it in frustration with Tamira's apparent delusion and embarrassment at being heard talking to her. This is a mistake. And when Tamira vanishes, Sam goes looking for her, realizing, as she flips through a deceased Indian classmate's diary, that the Pishacha, a demon from the stories they heard in childhood, is real and may have taken Tamira.

It Lives Inside draws on the bonds and chasms between immigrant parents and their children, the pull to assimilate into white American mainstream culture and the strength and support of family and Indian traditions. The cast handles what they've got well, but the script doesn't mine too deeply, and the race to find Tamira doesn't leave much time for reflection. We barely scratch the surface of Poorna's experience, though her instinct to respond to a demonic presence by cooking a huge meal is one for the South Asian mom hall of fame. Sam's sense of shame, too, could be further plumbed in terms of the workings of the demon and its connection to unrest and bad feelings.

The scary stuff is fairly simple: glowing eyes, movement in shadows, monstrous contortions. (Those of us who cut our teeth on The Amityville Horror know how far you can get with a set of glowing eyes.) And Dutta's execution is solid. We grip the armrests as a teacher moves through empty school hallways, and when the lights go out, Dutta delivers on that hiding-under-the-blankets thrill. Listen, after watching the trailer for Saw X (there are 10 of these?), I have renewed appreciation for a writer/director who can get teeth chattering with a PG13 rating.

It's only when the creature becomes a visible, palpable thing that the tension drops, which, unfortunately is when it should crescendo. My son is a tremendous fan of monsters, especially Guillermo Del Toro's. Those creatures feel fully formed, carry their own sorrows and rages in their bodies and postures, a touch of humanity that makes them awful. Without that, they can feel silly. In that case, it's better they stay in the shadows where our imaginations make their shapes. PG13. 99M. BROADWAY. ●

Darwin's Bulldog

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Huxley at age 55, 20 years after debating Wilberforce.

"I was the most popular man in Oxford for full four & twenty hours."

— T.H. Huxley, following his debate with Bishop Wilberforce

At 25, Thomas Henry Huxley returned from a four-year stint in the Royal Navy — he was assistant surgeon on a Royal Navy corvette exploring the South Seas from 1846 to 1850 — as something of a celebrity. His research papers on marine invertebrates, which he'd been mailing regularly back to London, so impressed the scions of gentlemen scientists of the day that he was promptly elected a fellow of the Royal Society when back on land. For someone so young and of a lowly upbringing, this was a huge honor.

Huxley was soon lecturing at Imperial College in London (my nemesis — I'm a Queen Mary alum), when he became friendly with Charles Darwin, another scientist-voyager, Darwin having spent four years as a naturalist on HMS Beagle. When Darwin's On the Origin of Species was published in 1859, Huxley became its most vocal promoter in the face of huge opposition from the Church of England. The theory of evolution ("survival of the fittest" in the later quick 'n' dirty phrase) directly challenged the Genesis account of our origins. While the church didn't have much to say about how worms and wombats had come about, it was seriously opposed to the notion that humans are essentially cousins of (gasp) chimpanzees, gorillas and orangutans — evolution having done the heavy lifting which, previously, God had taken care of.

"Would you prefer a monkey for your grandfather or grandmother?" asked Bishop Wilberforce, eight months after publication of Origin. The occasion was a debate, on the fourth day of the 1860 meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, between Huxley and Samuel "Soapy Sam" Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford. The son of William Wilberforce, the abolitionist who had headed the campaign to pass the 1807 (anti) Slave Trade Act, Samuel Wilberforce was a fierce conservative and a formidable debater,

"part viper, part soapbox parliamentarian" according to one account.

"The Lord hath delivered him into mine hands," Huxley is supposed to have whispered to a companion on hearing Wilberforce's sarcastic question. Huxley's response has gone down in history as the finest riposte ever: "If the question is put to me, would I rather have a miserable ape for a grandfather or a man highly endowed by nature and possessed of great means and influence and yet who employs these faculties and that influence for the mere purpose of introducing ridicule into a grave scientific discussion — I unhesitatingly affirm my preference for the ape." Touché!

Huxley's adoption of evolution went beyond academic or religious interest. For instance, he lectured on behalf of "Negro emancipation," defying the then common belief in polygeny — that Europeans and Africans are different species — which was used as justification for slavery, especially in the American South. As a comparative anatomist, and long before Watson and Crick cracked the structure of DNA in the 1950s, he marshaled the available evidence of the time to show that we are all descended from common (Black) ancestors.

Were it that simple. Pro-emancipation Thomas Huxley was a man of his time, an imperialist who believed in racial hierarchies: In his mind, to paraphrase Orwell, we're all equal, but some (whites) are more equal than others. As a result, he became an early eugenicist and one-time president of the British Eugenics Society. The controversy lives on. For instance, two years ago, the authorities at Bellingham's Western Washington University removed Huxley's name from its environmental college, citing his "white supremacist values."

Darwin got much right and, in the light of Mendelian genetics and DNA, much wrong. So did his "bulldog," T.H. Huxley. Still, one will always be known as the Father of Evolution and the other? Best comeback ever. ●

Barry Evans (he/him, barryevans9@yahoo.com) is conflicted as to whether we should judge historical figures by the values of their time or of ours.

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources. you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property.

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (628)946-4376 or visit this internet website www.servicelinkASAP.com, using the file number assigned to this case T.S. #032422 information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Website. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale.

NOTICE TO TENANT: You may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction if conducted after January 1, 2021, pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call (628)946-4376, or visit this internet website www.servicelinkASAP.com, using the file number assigned to this case T.S. #032422 to find the date on which the trustee's sale was held, the amount of the last and highest bid, and the address of the trustee. Second, you must send a written notice of intent to place a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 15 days after the trustee's sale. Third, you must submit a bid, by remitting the funds and affidavit described in Section 2924m(c) of the Civil Code, so that the trustee receives it no more than 45 days after the trustee's sale. If you think you may qualify as an "eligible tenant buyer" or "eligible bidder," you should consider contacting an attorney or appropriate real estate professional immediately for advice regarding this potential right to purchase.

ERNEST CLIFTON CLENDENEN

– FOUNDER OF
CLENDENEN CIDER WORKS

Ernest Clifton Clendenen, father of Andrew, grandfather of Clif, and great-grandfather of Drew, was born in Eureka, CA in 1867 shortly after his parents, Andrew and Emeline, arrived from New Brunswick, Canada. It was a long and arduous journey that took them around the stormy Cape Horn. E.C. Clendenen used to say, “I came around the Horn, and I was born in Eureka.”

Ernest, and his wife, May, bought the land that is the orchard today, in 1908 from E.F. Johnston of Oregon. Among the varieties of apple trees on the property dating back to 1869 were Minkler, Smith’s Cider and Stark – that are still producing apples today. “We use all three in the cider at different times,” Clif said. “The old varieties are blended with other varieties for great flavor.”

When E. C. bought the producing apple orchard, he first packed and shipped apples in wooden boxes that were sold on the San Francisco wholesale market. In 1909 this was an overnight horse-and-cart trip to the docks in Eureka from Fortuna! From the Eureka docks the apple boxes were loaded onto a steamship for the voyage to San Francisco. Word was sent back from San Francisco that one of his shipments had spoiled, and that he wouldn’t be paid for his apples. Wanting to see for himself, E.C. boarded the next steamship, and upon his arrival in S.F., found his apples in perfect condition in the unscrupulous dealer’s warehouse. The old dairy barn across the street from the orchard soon had a small cider press, and the Clendenen’s started pressing and selling fresh apple cider.

After struggling with a manual basket-type press for a few years, Ernest purchased the Mount Gilead No. 4-C Hydraulic Cider and Fruit Press in 1916, a room-sized machine that was shipped from Mt. Gilead, Ohio. Powered by an electric motor, it was capable of producing 100 gallons per hour, allowing uninterrupted pressing while the next batch was prepared.

CIDER FACT

During Prohibition, the cider press ran nearly every day during the apple season. Apples from numerous local orchards were harvested and brought to Clendenen Cider Works for processing to supply the demand for a fermentable juice.

ANDREW CLENDENEN

Less than a year after E. C. and May purchased the land, in January of 1909, May gave birth to their son Andrew in the house that is still being used by the family today.

Andy Clendenen rejoined his father in the family business in 1948, after delivering fuel for Shell Oil Company, and serving in the South Pacific during WW II. In 1960 he moved the business across the street and into a new 1,800 square foot building. It was constructed by the Fortuna firm of T & H Construction and cost $3,829, not including plumbing, electrical or painting. The quality of construction and choice of materials has allowed the building to withstand several major earthquakes over the past forty years.

CLIF AND DREW CLENDENEN

Like his father, Andy, Clif took to the business at a young age. Today, Clif and his son Drew are picking apples, pressing, which happens roughly every five days, and welcoming visitors to sample a drink that varies in taste as different varieties become ripe. Clif and Drew blend varieties and each pressing has its own unique taste and texture.
